YOU CONTROL THE QUALITY

The quality of our work should be a daily source of pride and satisfaction to us and a constant benefit to those we teach—and to those we teach with. We don't have to reflect very long to realize that we put our “stamp of quality” on every class and on every student we teach. No one who passes through our classroom doors should fail to see or experience the quality of our work. Without reservation, the quality of our effort and performance can only be diminished by us—not by good times or hard times, unless we choose to allow it to be affected.
